Agaric acid-containing triterpenoid derivatives from the fruiting bodies of Leptodontidium sp.: potential inhibition of aromatase and estrogen receptor binding. Two new compounds with an agaric acid-like structure were isolated from the fruiting bodies of Leptodontidium sp. (Pezizales, Leptodontiaceae). Their structures were elucidated by spectroscopic data interpretation and chemical degradation as agaritatin-1- α -O-beta-D-glucopyranoside and agaritatin-1-beta-O-beta-D-glucopyranoside. Both compounds showed weak aromatase inhibition activity at 10.0 microg/ml, and agaritatin-1- α -O-beta-D-glucopyranoside exhibited strong binding activity at 10.0 microM for the estrogen receptors alpha and beta, with K_i values of 3.13 microM and 1.74 microM, respectively. The two compounds also exhibited a good inhibitory activity toward porcine trypsin and bovine alpha-chymotrypsin.
